KNOW THE WEATHER
By E. H. Sims

What is "the best weather for the hitter — in baseball?

The best kind of day for the hitter, or slugger, in baseball, is the warm, clear day, when the air is light, or when the wind is blowing from the homeplate to the outfield. This weather produces excellent vision, light air, with no handicap wind for the ball being hit.

Since warm air is lighter than cold air, a ball will travel just a little further in warm celar air. The batter's vision is best on a clear day. On the other hand, the best weather for a pitcher is a cold, dark day, with the wind blowing from the outfield to homeplate.

In such weather the batter's vision will be more restricted, the air will be just a little heavier, and the ball will not travel so far when hit, and the wind will also check its flight. A combination of these factors can often be important in a baseball game, although any one of them (with the exception of a strong wind) is not overly important.

In FASHION Now

Madras fabric has been popular in America for the past few seasons in notable plaids. Now we have a new version of Madras coming to us in solid colors. You will find deep-dyed indigo blue Madras alone or teamed with smoked jewel plaids of the original article.

The bias cut will be strongly featured in most leading collections for spring and summer. To look its best, the bias cut requires a perfect or near-perfect figure.

Cotton and cotton combinations will be the outstanding fabric for summer. Gingham spun as fine as silk is fashioned into soft, becoming dresses for young and old. Full skirts are favored for the very soft qualities of gingham, with organdy trim or self trim.

Glove-length coat sleeves of the winter coat have given way to pushed-up sleeves for the spring coat. Hats are almost any shape you like, with those pushed to the back of the head or worn square on the top leading in the new look.

Shoes seemed to have changed very little. You will see somewhat less fabric and more colored leather. In fact, without care, you could easily confuse a fashionable shoe store for a spring flower garden.

Check Tobacco Plant Beds For Toxicity, Growers Told

Tobacco growers who used cyanamid on plant beds last fall to control weeds, and who were late applying the material, should check the beds now for toxicity before seeding.

G. R. Mathews, tobacco specialist at VPI, says that reports from the flue-cured area indicate that many farmers applied cyanamid during November. In such cases there is danger of tobacco seed germination being wholly or partially destroyed because of a carry-over of toxic substances in the cyanamid. Beds that were treated with cyanamid in September and early October should be safe if they were adequately watered or if enough rain fell within a few weeks to thoroughly wet the soil.

Mathews says a simple way to check the plant beds for cyanamid toxicity is to use the "radish test." Soak a few radish seed over night in water. About 10 days before you plan to seed the bed, plant some of the radish seed in a small area of the treated bed. Place a quart jar over the seeded area and push the mouth of the jar into the soil about two inches. Make another similar seeding nearby in an area that was not treated with cyanamid. Under favorable conditions the radish plants should appear within five or six days. Normal germination and growth of the radish indicates that the toxic phase of cyanamid has passed and it will be safe to seed the bed. If radish seed in the bed do not germinate and those seeded outside of the bed do germinate, it last Monday evening at 7:30. Deacon Johnny Paige, vice president, presided. A panel discussion headed by Mrs. Josephine Webb, was the highlight of the meeting. The panel was entitled, What we can do to help our children. The other members of the panel were Miss H. B. Stephens, Mrs. Priscilla Ferguson, Miss Garnayle Lee and Principal R. E. Patrick. A lively discussion followed the presentation. A committee was appointed to wait on the Superintendent of Schools in regards to the summer program of work. A special offering was taken to help provide free lunch for some of the needy children.

very likely will be unsafe to seed the bed. Under such conditions, disk and re-condition the bed, or prepare a new bed.
